EXTRA. 2 O'CLOCK. IS DR. DEPEW GUILTY.

Trial of New Haven Directors for the Tunnel Slaughter Goes On.

President Clark Ignored All Steam Car-Heating Plans.

Attachments Issued for Witnesses Who Failed to Come to Court.

The third day of the trial of Dr. Chauncey M. Depew and his fellow-directors of the New Haven railroad on indictments charging them with responsibility for the accident in the Fourth Avenue tunnel Feb. 20 last, which caused the death of six persons, began in New York yesterday.

At adjournment last night, only one fact alleged in the indictment charging Dr. Depew with responsibility for the accident had been proven. It had been established by eight witnesses that coal stoves were in use on the cars of the late train on the day of the well-remembered horror in the tunnel. Such use of these stoves is forbidden by the laws of this State, and in their use lies the guilt of the defendants.

Dr. Depew was not present when court was opened, but Directors Clark, Reed, Robinson and others were grouped about the half dozen eminent lawyers retained to defend them.

Judge Van Brunt had hardly seated himself when a half-dozen old gentlemen with flat-top hats and white hair, who were identified by the witness as having been present on the day of the disaster, entered the room and proceeded to address the court on the subject of an invention which, if applied to railway coaches, would prevent similar accidents.

It was insisted on by the room into the corridor, where he gave his name as Thomas C. Baker, inventor of the car heater, and was recalled to the witness stand. Dr. Depew, after a brief cross-examination, identified the witness as having been present on the day of the disaster, in which the Baker car heater was used on the New Haven train, and that he had approved of the heater.
